Quote:True about John and Lena. I wonder if they could try to get a DNA match from some hair? Would Jeff had made sure all of the copies of people's fingerprints were destroyed as well as any DNA records?

That's what I was thinking of. I think Jeff would have an agent (possibly Penny?) getting into any files that would contain such info and getting rid of it... or replacing it with something else, such as the DNA/fingerprints of someone who was dead. It would create a problem should someone go missing... there are permutations to such a deletion/substitution that might make it difficult to do. Maybe if someone has those fingerprints/samples and they key into a system, they'd be diverted to a doctored "identity" and a signal would go to Penny or whoever was in charge of keeping those identifiers under wraps? We can brainstorm about this; it's an interesting potential problem.