
Subject: Re: Home is Where the Heart Is
Posted by Lillehafrue on Mon, 30 Jul 2012 00:39:34 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

From: Hobbeth Sent: 10/14/2006 9:46 PM

Each person sat quietly, lost in his or her thoughts. There had been so much destruction, some of it close to home for a few of them. Kat looked around at the others, wishing she could say or do something to ease the sadness.

She began to feel dizzy, then faint. Oh no, she thought as she checked the time. It's been too long since I last ate! She checked her pockets and found a Muesli bar. Quickly opening it, she began to munch on it.

The sound aroused Tin-Tin and Gordon, who both looked at her, then at each other. "It's been too long since any of us had something to eat. Whether or not we feel like eating is irrelevant," she said. "We need sustenance, if only to have enough energy to get through the debriefing when we get back to base. Thanks, Kat, for reminding us."

"You're welcome, although that's not why I did what I did."

Gordon smiled slightly. "Then maybe we should thank your blood sugar problem for making the rest of us realize we need to eat."

Kat giggled a little. "Always glad to help whenever I can."

Well, let's get the MREs distributed," said Tin-Tin. "Gordon, will you help me?"

"Okay, Tin-Tin," Gordon replied. They got up and went to where they had the MREs stored. They began to pass them out to everyone. Elise asked for two, saying she'd take the other one to Virgil when she finished eating hers. That way he could have his while she piloted Two.

They chowed down, making sporadic comments once in a while. But no one felt like talking much.
